The keywords this summer? Sassy. And Sweet. CND's brand-new partner Mary Katrantzou's unique "Collectibles" collection celebrated those who covet objects from butterflies to bling. Even shoe heels were "showcased" in acrylic, with stilettos inside. Attention to detail and startling silhouettes forged a study in perfection. Manish Arora displayed what WWD termed his "kitschy unconventionality" in a sporty yet sexy wealth of '80s garments fit for Austin Powers fans and fun-seeking fashionistas alike. Bright hues mixed with pompoms, sequins, and shoulders set almost to the earlobes. This season's joyous Libertine show brought us models emblazoned with stickers and Cher's "Take Me Home" on the soundtrack, along with floral prints for all. Hand-painted seascapes and plants designs were a gentle reminder to save the planet. Meanwhile, Ryan Lo's romantic garden party frocks and gowns of pastels, posies, dots and ruffles were modern yet flirtatious. Think Masterpiece Theatre 2050. Outsiders and unconventionality ruled in Gareth Pugh's hard-edged presentation, with the softer side represented by shades of lilac and airs from Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring." And what could be more Vivienne Westwood-ish than an urban extravaganza staged in a car park? While street performers on skateboards and scooters wowed us, models of all genders strutted on sky-high platform skate shoes and sandals. My favorite accessory? Westwood's wonderfully wacky red hat topped by a full-sized upside-down matching chair! Last but not least, The Blonds, in an official collaboration with Disney, paid tribute to the heroines they have loved since childhood. From the Evil Queen to the Queen of Hearts, it was all delightfully decadent. And, after all, who doesn't want to be a femme fatale?

If Disney villains didn't already exist, the Blonds would have invented them. The nefarious but glamorous icons wowed in gold mosaics, rainbow-hued marabou, black leather, and scarlet satin. Our Design Lab pros heightened the drama with nails sporting spikes and metal, set off by crystals, jewels and hearts. Red, red hearts.

Vibes of time

Johnson Hartig loves to embellish, and he did so gently for SS2019, as painted blue-and-white seascapes alternate with cheery floral prints. To complement the romantic designs, CND chose Victorian overtones: blossoms inside caviar beading, patterns reminiscent of needlepoint and chintz, and skeletal "love tokens." To die for!

Mary Katrantzou

Mary Katrantzou's unique "Collectibles" runs the gamut from collections of stamps and butterflies showcased in prints to black & white grids to plastic bubble jackets holding actual objects. With a nod to showcasing precious treasures, CND created artful "glass" nails with domes, floating silver taps, and just one pop of luscious red.

MANISHA

Manish's 1980s-inspired "Girls Just Wanna Have Fun" mixes colors to dazzling effect then adds girly trimmings like ruffles, sequins, and embroidery accessorized with crystal leopard and wedding cake handbags. CND got into the groove with animal prints, sculpted rosebuds, neon hues in blocks and ribbons, and simply silvery white. Like, radical, baby.

Ryan Lo

Softly retro, Ryan Lo's new "Saturn Returns" collection is daringly delicate, demure dressing for divas. Puffed and high-set sleeves, wide-set Peter Pan collars, and ruffled hems are pretty but never prim. CND highlighted the main color ways—pale florals on paler backgrounds, polka dots—with nails in pink-kissed nude and fiery red. Simply divine!

Gareth Pugh

Gareth Pugh doesn't sugarcoat. His women "accept zero BS," and this "outsider" collection was sharp as a razor's edge, rich in red and black, even paramilitary. Softness crept in with lavender and iridescent lilac and "The Rites of Spring" on the soundtrack. CND matched moods with rounded ovals, geometrics, and hard and sweet colors.

WESTWOOD VIVIENNE

Vivienne Westwood is the ultimate urbanite, so who better to offer a toast to urban tribal culture? Her post-apocalyptic skate-street chic boasts something for everyone, from Asian-influenced harem pants to Parisian-style bustiers. CND complemented with understated manicures and graffiti-like art on short-to-medium nails.
